Irish Heroes. The love of fighting popularly attributed to the people of Ireland is certainly borne out by the long and brilliant list of Irish generats who have figured in history since the fall of Limerick in 1691. Many of the beroes of that famous struggle subsequently distinguished themselves on the Continent. O'Dwyer rose to the rank of major-general, and commanded against the Turks at Belgrade, under Prince Eugene, in 1696. "Pat. Sarstield, of Limerick," gained fresh laurels in the service of Louis XIV., who made him Counte de Lucan. Lord Mounteashel fell in Savoy, and Lord Clare at Romillies. Marshal Browne, the Austrian commander-in-chief at the opening of the seven years' war, was an Irishman, as were also the Russian Generals Fermor and De Lucy, the former's name being a foreign corruption of his real title of Fermoy. Count Lally, one of the founders of the short-lived French Empire in India, whose unjust and barbarous condemnation disgraced the reign of Louis XV. as much as his exploits had adorned it, was a scion of the O'Mulally family, of whose name his French title was a corruption. The same combative race produced Washington's brother-in-arms, General Andrew Lewis, the hero of Point Pleasant; O'Donnell, the famous guerrilla leader of Spain against Had these purses become volutile in the his father. This was hardly done before the invading French; Sir John Moore, whose death at Corunna ended the first Peninsular war; the Duke of Wellington himself, as well as several of his most brilliant lieutenants; General Pennefather, who was foremost in the crowning struggle at Inkerman, and by descent at least, Marshal MacMabon, the present head of the French Republic.
